Hanoi Claims 5 Downed 350 U.S. Planes Bomb N. Vietnam in 2 Days

SAIGON, Dec. 27, Monday (AP).—A U.S. strike force of 350 planes launched scores of raids egainst North Vietnam yesterday and renewed the attacks today in an around-the-clock bomhing campaign.

Radio Hanol said "many" American planes had been shot down and five pilots captured. But the North Vietnamese news egency reported five planes downed.

The new campaign, perhaps the biggest since the full-scale bomb-ing halt on Nnv. 1. 1968, was oimed at crippling North Vietnam's anti-aircraft defense network and in part retaliation for the downing of four U.S. jets a wrek ago, informents said. The U.S. command declined comment on the Radio Hanoi claims, but field reports from were another "serious provocation" against North Vietnam. The agency said 30 planes partiripated in each ettack. It did not reveal the number of air assaults.

The North Vietnamese news agency, in addition to reporting five F-4 Phantoms downed, said American planes attacked residential areas of Quang Binh and Hanh Hoa Provinces. It said the planes bomhed end strafed a liospital in Hanh Hoa.

On Soturday, before the major ralds hegan, the U.S. command search and rescue units indicated there had been some American losses

Warning on POWs

The raids came less than 24 hours after Radio Hanol warned in a broadcast that no American prisoners of war would be released "so long as U. S. warplanes continue to violate North Viet-nam and the Nixon administration refuses to take the steps necessary to end the war."

The U. S. command gave only scant details of the raids and said other information would not be provided until they are completed "for reasons of military security and the safety of our pilots."

There was no immediate indication when the strikes would be completed. There was some speculation they might continue through tomorrow, although the command said they are of "limited duration."

About 20,000 persons were gathered in St. Peter's Square in mild and sunny weather to re-ceive the papal benediction. Most of them had earlier attended a solemn mass inside the basilica at which the Pontiff officiated. It was Pope Faul's third Christmas rite. He had celebrated midnight mass for diplomats accredited to the Vetican in the Sisting

Chapel. After a few hours of rest the 74-year-old I nim was driven to the eastern outskirts of Rome. At the modern church at Torre Spaccata, a new housing developmant, the Pope said mass for a congregation of 400, many of whom were policemen and their families.

to the Vatican for the pontifical mass in St. Peter's. Today, the Pope said that the institution of the family held a social and civil value of the highest importance" to modern soclety and that mankind must guard and protect it for the moral health of our people."

Speaking to a St. Stephen's Day crowd of pilgrims and tourists in St. Peter's Square, the dedicated his noon blessing to the family.

The command described the targets only as "military targets in North Vietnem," and said they are being attacked "in reaction to enemy activity which imperils the diminishing U.S. forces currently in South Vietnam:"

As in previous major strikes, It was believed that the U.S. planes also pounded North Vletnamese fuel and supply depots

Yugoslavia Easing Limits On U.S. Firms

By David A. Andelman NEW YORK, Dec. 26 (NYT). -The Yugoslav government is prepared to allow select American corporations to own 50 percent or more of Yugoslav businesses established under joint venture arrangements as opposed to the maximum 49 percent foreign ownership now permitted.

The breakthrough, revealed by top Yugoslav economic sources Washington and New York in last week, indicates a major change in thinking among toplevel Yugoslav financial experts in Belgrade, stimulated, apparently, by the serious trade deficit and inflation that have been plaguing the country.

Yugosiavia would thus become the first country in Eastern Europe to permit a majority ownership of its corporations by Western. particularly American, firms. "It is not a political decihowever, a Yugoslav sion." spokesman cautioned. "It is purely economic."

Romania, by virtue of its more liberal foreign and investment policles, is expected to follow in taking similar steps. But the Romanian moves may be several years in the future, foreign investment experts indicated last week.

Yugoslavia is a member of the Council on Mutual Economic Assistance (Comecon) and also participates in a limited scale in some trading ventures with the European Economic Community, The proposal was first broached, according to the Yugoslav scurces, during a secret meeting held at Washington's Blair House in October between visiting Yugoslav President Tito, two of his top finance officials who were not identified, and about a top dozen American husinessmen and industrialists.

The meeting in Washington at the official guest house of the President was arranged by Secretary of Commerce Maurice H. Stans, who has been active recently in encouraging enlarged trade between the United States and Eastern European nations. A spokesman for the Commerce Department confirmed that the meeting had taken place and that among those represented vere several American corporations with interests in Yugoslavia and others that have expressed whose activity could have led to "civil war." The central management board of the Matica Hrvatska cultural organization resigned after being accused of nationalism, the board announced in Zagreb, the capital of Croatia:

President Tito early this month accused Croatla's Communist leaders of being too lenient toward nationalism and what he called a "counter-revolution" that threatened the nation's unity.

The Croatian Communist party leaders resigned and President Tito told local Communist organizations to purge nationalists in their own regions in all the country-not only in Croatia.

President Tito told Yougoslavia he will not hesitate to use the army to crush nationalistic outand keep the country bursts united. The 79-year-old leader also told police and the courts to act more efficiently against nationalists

He singled out the Matica Hrvatska organization as a main force of Croatian nationalism. The Matica Hrvatska, registered as an organization for promoting the cultural traditions of Croatia. was widely involved in anti-Yugoslav political activities, he said.

In a development today, Vladimir Maksimovic, president of the Yugoslav youth organization, said that teachers with nationalistic feelings should be dismissed from the nation's schools and universities.

Meanwhile, two persons were injured today when a bomb exploded in front of the Yugoslav airline JAT terminal in Belgrade. Miroslav Gobec, 67, lost both his arms and his seven-year-old granddaughter was injured in a leg. Mr. Miroslav had picked up a package left on the succession. In an attempt to defuse the situation, Indian and Bengladesh officials are trying to persuade the Mukti Bahini and other independent "freedom-fighter" bands to join a special, and temporary, national militia to maintain law and order and work on other reconstruction tasks.

Officials hope that the passage of time and the reopening of the universities will help cool and rechannel the emotions of the young activists. As a concession to these passions, the Bangladesh leadership has an-nounced that it will bring to trial and punish all those guilty of genocide and other war crimes. drastic change in the Bangladesh. social climate and a great deal of persuasion to reduce ethnic fears and hates.

One great stride forward, ex-perts agree, would be the release of Sheikh Mujibur, considered the only leader with the qualities to command the attention of all Bengalis.

Firms Hesitant

Until now, American corporations have been besitant about investing heavily in major operations in Yugoslavia or indeed anywhere in Eastern Europe, although some large European companies, particularly Fiat and Simca, have extensive joint venture investments in Yugoslavia in automobile production plants. Several of the American businessmen who were present at the meeting, but were not identified, reportedly told President Tito that, for psychological reasons, it would be far easier to convince American companies to participate in joint ventures in Yugoslavia if the American partners were permitted even 50 or 51 percent ownership.

The Yugoslav financial experts present at the meeting then replied that they understood the point the Americans were making and that "for these psychological reasons exceptions would be made in the future."

the spokesman said, addi that the sniper had evaded troops seeking him.

British explosives experts said they had accidentally triggered a booby trap they found in an automobile in the Protestant area of College Park in Belfast.

The bomb disposal men tried to open the car by setting off a small explosive charge under the hood, but it detonated the booby trap fuside.

"Fortunately, our men stood well back," the spokesman added. There were no injuries. Troops found 300 rounds of 7.62 ammunition in the car and in an abandoned house nearby.

Among few reported incidents of violence yesterday, an army spokesman said that soldiers in Belfast had fired at a sniper but missed and that a bomb had destroyed a parked school bus at Castelderg in County Tyrone. The blast smashed windows of the school but hurt no one.

Irish Republican Army suspects in three main internment camps staged a hunger strike and al-most 1,000 Belfast residents marched in sympathy, the spokesman said.

The violence in Northern Ireland began two years ago in clashes between the province's Protestants and its Roman Catholic minority. This year, the IRA began a terrorist campaign aimed at reuniting Northern Ire-land with the Irish Republic.

NEW DELHI, Dec. 26 (AP) .---Foreign Minister Swaran Singh said yesterday that he has sympathy for President Bhutto but he advised the new Pakistani leader -installed after India's victory in a two-week war-to face the reality of an independent Bangladesh.

"We would welcome his coming to power as the government lead-er of West Pakistan if he sheds his role as martial-law administrator and reverts to democracy," Mr. Singh said.

However, the Indian added, if Mr. Bhutto "clings to the shadow of Bangladesh as part of Paki-stan, he will be committing a grievous mistake and will prevent the restoration of normalcy to the subcontinent." About 300 demonstrators pro-tested outside the U.S. and Chi-

Viet Cong Radio Carries Messages From 2 GI POWs

SAIGON, Dec. 26 (UPI) .-- Two Christmas messages said to have been taped by captured American servicemen were broadcast yesterday by Radio Liberation, the clandestine radio station of the Viet Cong.

The new messages made a total of four so far this Christmas seeson, compared to about 30 last year. This year, unlike last, no messages have been broadcast from American pilots terday were identified as Alfonso Ray Riage (a phonetic spelling) and James Alexander Daly (also phonetic).

The broadcast said the men are being held in "a camp of detention for captured American servicemen in South Vietnam." Military sources say the camp probably is in North Vietnam. The U.S. command said it has no record of either man,

Mr. Riage's message was addressed 'o John Riage, of Eelgarden, Calif., and Mr. Daly's to Mrs. Mary Daly, identified as his mother, of New York City. As usual, the voices had American accents, but the messages were partly in stilted English, as if some of the sentences had been drafted by the Viet Cong themselves,

For the last two years, Presi-dent Nixon has unsuccessfully sought stronger powers than he now possesses under the Taft-Hartley Act to avert strikes by longshoremen, railroad workers and others in the transportation Members of the administration stressed Congress's failure to give the President the tools he says

"It is absolutely outrageous that the Congress will not move to pass this legislation," Under Secretary of Labor Laurence Sil-berman said.

Mr. Stans said thet as a result of Mr. Nixon's economic moves, including a devaluation of the dollar, there was a good chance that the coontry would achieve a trade balance or a small surphys next year.

But he said that a prolonged renewal of the dock strikes that were held this year would virtually guarantee a trade deficit in 1972, since exports would be affected much more than imports. Mr. Nizon has exhausted his present powers to intervene and West Coast dockers-now work-ing under a temporary court injunction obtained by the govern-ment-will be free to strike after this week. East Coast dockers, similarly working under an in-junction, will be free to strike in February.

Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz stressed the hardship to farmers of another dock strike and urged Congress to pass legislation that would avert the threat. Aside from the fears of a dock strike, the officials spoke confidently of prospects for the U.S. economy-which is expected to be the major issue of the presidential election campaign.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26 (UPI). -U.S. businessmen say they are confused abont what the longrange effects of Mr. Nixon's economic policy will be, but the chief economist of the U.S. Cham-ber of Commerce predicted today that 1972 would be a year of strong economic growth.

Dr. Carl H. Madden, the economist, said in a paper that he expected "inflation, after six long years." to be "significantly tempered.

Meanwhile, a poll of U.S. business leaders by Nation's Business magazine found corporation executives in general agreement that the tempo of the country's economy was on the upswing but that the effects of the administration's policy were difficult to assess.

The DC-9 was damaged, a spokesman said, but none of the 76 passengers and five crewmen aboard the Zurich-bound airliner was injured.

Police identified the dead man as Konrad Glatz, a 65-year-old Austrian. Airport police and Swissair said that the DC-9 was given permission to take off at 9:35 a.m. and was taxiing along the runway.

The DC-9'e pilot, Paul Frei, had just reached takeoff speed, Swissair said, "when suddenly a two-engined Beechcraft-55 sports plane appeared in front of him. Capt. Frei tried to decelerate bnt did not have enough time. The collision was unavoidable."

A police officer agreed. He said that the DC-9 "just had to go right into the small plane." The DC-9 was brought to a stop without taking off.

A year later, in May, 1964, the Agency for International Devel-opment and the Export-Import Bank signed loans for the project totaling $35.1 million, with the difference between the loans and the actual cost to be paid by Peru.

Bidding took slightly more than a year, and in the process the specifications were lowered from asphalt to gravel, and the Peruvian Army was assigned to handle part of the project to bring the costs closer to the money available. In mid-1965 a contract was signed with a consortium of Peruvian and American companies. Work began in early 1965.

Trouble With Landslides

Throughout the next four years the project was plagued by landslides, which prought with them disputes as to whether they were caused by the nature of the terrain-in which case the Peruvian government should pay for clearing the rubble away-or by faulty work by the contractor, which would mean that the contractor had to clear them away at his own expense. On Oct. 3, 1968, a military junta took over Peru. In December of that year an American engineer from the project, Charles Pettis, accompanied a Peruvian engineer to the U.S. mission in Lima to report numerous irregularities in the project, and an aid audit was begun in early 1969.

Shortly after that, productiva work on the project began to taper off and finally stopped on Feh. 1, 1970, after Peru refused to drop litigation and pay for already approved work.

The War Is Ended, But...

The fighting between India and Pakistan In the latter area, virtually the only card has stopped, and there seems little likelihood that it will be resumed now. But the tensions that gave rise to the war, the hard conditions of life on the subcontinent, and a multitude of opportunities for friction remain. The situation has been compared to the Middle Eastern war of 1967-a brisk, temporarily decisive military campaign, followed by months and years of something less than war and much less than peace.

There are problems in southern Asia, however, that require solution-or at least amelioration-in a much shorter period. It may be that India and Pakistan could glower at one another acrose their frontiers indefinitely, much as the Israelis and Arabs have done. But the 1967 war did not bring the same sharp challenges to the governments involved that the 1971 war has done. True, the Mid-Eastern refugee goestion (left unresolved since 1948) bears some resemblances to that of the refugees from East Pakistan. Both place heavy strains on the host nation and on that to which they hope to return.

Nevertheless, the scale of the present refugee crisis in India and Bangladeeh is astronomical. Unlike the Palestinians, those who fled East Pakistan do have a homeland awaiting them in Bangladesh. The great unknown does not concern politics in the broad international sense, but the more restricted, yet still extremely difficult task of creating a viable government out of something very close to chaos, with no sound economic base.

Then there is Pakistan, which itself has undergone a revolution-bloodlees as yetand which must create new institutions at home and make new adjustments abroad. themselves-and eating.

held by the government of President Bhutto seems to be its possession of Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, head of the Awami League and putative leader of Bangladesh. Mrs. Gandhi laid enormous stress on the release of Sheikh Mujibur in her negotiations before the war, but it is doubtful whether one man looms quite so large in Indian considerations now. Perhaps Mr. Bhutto hopes that, with the sheikh's assistance, he can patch up some sort of association with Bangladesh and so blunt the worst wounds to Pakistani pride. But by the time the Bengalis finish taking revenge for the brutal West Pakistani attempt to suppress their secessionist movement, it is unlikely any basis for association will remain.

As for the outside powers, their role could be even more restricted than in the Arab-Israeli conflict. With Pakistan halved, there is no balance of force that could practicably be restored in the subcontinent, as the Soviet Union restored it in the Middle East with vast armaments after the Arab defeat. India is acutely sensitive to any suggestion of control through aid programs, whether by the Soviet Union or the United States. The United Nations has been defied, and is poweriess under the circumstances. Even purely humanitarian aid must be hampered until the creation of some organs of government in Bangladesh through which it can be channeled. There will, of course, be great arguments in the world's chancelleries about recognition and other dipiomatic considerations. But for the moment the fate of the subcontinent rests upon the efforts three populous, poverty-stricken nations of to meet some bare essentials of governing

For a Doubting U.S. 'Peace in the Heart'

By James Reston

mas message to the American was a time for reflection and spoke of "that special grace that : forgiving a time of goodwill, politics, it is difficult to find, when we know the true peace that anything in the history of nations lodges in the heart. As we work. toward peace in the world, let us do so both inspired and strengthened by this peace in the heart... It is a noble sentiment, but peace in the heart" is one thing the American people do not have at the end of 1971. We are still, as Mr. Lincoln said, "destitute of faith but terrified of skepticism," rich, well-favored, decent and ms, but without "peace in generous, b the heart."

There is in this country today, unless I see it wrong, more equality, more people at work under favorable conditions than ever before in the history of the republic, more progress at the fringes of life than at any other time, but at the core and heart of life there is great uncertainty, self-doubt and even self-hate. If this is true, where lies the explanation? It lies, I think, in s paradox: in the failure of sucs. Adversity we have conquered with perseverance, but prosperity has been too much for us. The old gods may have failed, but the "bitch goddess success" was no substitute.

Lewis Rebuked

Not so long ago, Vernon Par-rington could rebuke Sinclair Lewis for sneering at the middleclass values of the small American towns. "A rich and abundant life, motivated by a fine sense of ethical responsibility and dis-ciplined by a democratic public, school, is, in sober fact," said Parrington, "the distinguishing characteristic of America, that sets our country apart from all other lands in Western civilization

"Where else has the industrial: revolution been brought so compietely and happily under dominion to the democratic idea, or been eo ennobled by ethical values? Here it has scattered its wealth among the plain people with a bountiful hand, until the poorest family enjoys Its nickelplated plumbing, its flivver, its telephone, its radio . . . and all the thousand alos to comfort and intelligence which a few generations ago were denied kings." This was the popular assump-tion and maybe the fetal fallacy of American materialism; - that when our machines and our power

"scattered wealth among the plain. people," everybody would live like kings, and in a way this is precisely what happened, for now a great many people not only live grave dilemma. Because we have like kings, but are as unhappy as kings. When that remarkable Frenchman, Jacques Maritain, was in-the United States, he wrote that "the supreme value in the Ameri-

On the larger scale of world to match the generosity of the United States in rebuilding both Alled and enemy nations afterthe last world war, and yst equally difficult to explain the widespread indifference in this country toward the butchery of human life in Pakistan since last March or the killing that still goes on in Vietnam now, after 25 long years of warfare in that wretched country.

Still, there are some things to add to these morbid reflections. Mistakes of policy can be cor-rected. "I sometimes think," Mr. Justice Cardoso once remarked "that we worry ourselves overmuch about the enduring conse quences of our errors. They may work a little confusion for a time. In the end they will be modified or corrected or their teaching ignored. The future takes care of these things." It does, that is, if we can still count on what John Lord O'Brian calls the presistible moral force of conscience and count also on covernment that follows "a а. strong and central role of simple fairness." And fortunately there. is some evidence around that the conscience of the nation still exists.

In fact, one reason why there is so little "peace in the heart" of America at the end of 1971 is that a great many people are finally facing the moral dilemmas. of power, materialism and war, which were being evaded or ignored just a few short years ago. They are challenging many old assumptions about the rights of governments to make war and the production of anything regardless of what it does to the human condition, and the relations between men and women, employers and employees, yes, and even the relations between the church and the individual and the highly edvertised satisfactions of the Even John Foster Dulles, who did so, much to expand American military power and extend American political commitments from Europe to Vietnam, went to his grave wondering it material power was the answer.

"We have lost the connection between our religious faith and our practices. . ." he wrote. "We no longer see that our faith is relevant to modern conditions. Italy: No Cause for Elation

There is little cause for elation in the fact that Italy's electoral college has finally been able to choose the sixth president of the republic-though it is no reflection on Giovanni Leone to put it that way. Sen. Leone lacks the national stature of Enrico de Nicola and Luigi Einaudi, the first two presidents after Italy voted out the monarchy in 1946, but he measures up well to his three immediate predecessors.

A distinguished lawyer and professor, a veteran of both houses of parliament with a long tenure as president of the Chamber of Depoties and an interim premier on two occasions, Mr. Leone has impressive qualifications for the presidency. He belongs to no faction of the Christian Democrats and thus is able on occasion to coax a measure of unity out of that divided party. Yet, the fact is that-after failing in their die-hard effort to elect Amintore Fanfanithe Christian Democrats turned to Mr. Leone mostly because nobody has anything against him and he could command the needed supplementary support from other democratic forces. He does seem, despite some claims to the contrary, to have won without the votes of either extreme in Italy-an important achievement at a time when the Fascists had supposedly made gains with a "law-andorder" appeal and the Communists were trying openly to jure the Christian Democrats into at least a limited collaboration.

Nevertheless, the marathon election, carried live on television through 15 days and 23 ballots, helped discredit Italy's democratic machinery when it was already in crisis. It dramatized the disarray in Christian Democratic ranks, but also the zeal of the Catholic party to regain the presidency in addition to the premiership, This ambition helped drive the Socialist party back into its old alliance with the Communists.

Early in the new year there will have to be an effort to rebuild ties between Christian Democrats and Socialists. The present center-left coalition seems the only viable governing formula at least until 1973. A protracted crisis appears certain when Premier Colombo's government submits its resignation to the new president, as the constitu-

Also looming in 1972 is a fight over a referendum, sought by militant Catholics, to repeal the 1970 divorce law. This could revive old religious hostilities and force the Christian Democrats into unwilling alliance with the Fascists-and against all the so-called "lay" forces of Italian politics.

The problems just ahead will require all of President-elect Leone's skills in negotiating and conciliating, and a high order of national leadership as well.

Again, 'Rolling Thunder'

Escalation of American bombing of North and South Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos in recent days files in the face of administration promises that the United States is withdrawing from a combat role. The Demilitarized Zone has become a phantom; American fighter-bombers are ranging closer to Hanoi in operations that call up memories of the heavy air war of the past. The risks are formidable-for the engaged fliers and for the chances of peace.

It is folly to believe that Air Force and Navy crews can fly with impunity or achieve an old dream of victory—or Vietnamization -through bombardment. Aithough the casualties have diminished on the ground and riflemen have been withdrawn, a shock of recognition has followed confirmation that four jets have been shot down over northern Laos by MiGe and missiles. Fortunately, some of the fliers have been rescued but others are missing or captured.

These dangerous missions grow out of the concept of "protective reaction" strikes against missile installations that fire back at unarmed reconnaiseance planes. But more than reconnaissance is involved in the steady buildup of sorties this year. "Reinforced protective reaction" has meant heavy bombing against military targets. There have been over 100 such strikes inside North Vietnam this year. More than 6,000 sortice -one flight hy one aircraft-were made last month alone.

The main aim is to curtail the flow of supplies along the Ho Chi Minh Trail leading to South Vietnam. Undoubtedly, enemy inflitration has been slowed down in the dry eeason following the monsoon. But despite the raids the enemy is still capable of mounting attacks in Cambodia and retaliating with its own form of "protective reaction" against fighter-bombers, by ground and air counterfire.

The Nixon administration has warned it will take "strong and effective measures" against infiltration. Increasing the pressure resembles the "Rolling Thunder" air war against North Vietnam that was called off in 1968. Now, with new losses of American aircraft and airmen, it is possible that a renewed effort will be made to retaliate with more firepower. The experience of the past only suggests that even overwhelming air superiority cannot bring military victory.

that was increasingly blocking relationships between the United States and Europe and threatening to dissolve friendship into depression and trade war. When speaking with Nixon at the Azores, where the initial break was accomplished, he could speak for "Europe" in a way never achieved by his great predecessor, de Gaulle.

The reason is that Pompidou has deliberately reduced the scope of French aspirations and no longer seeks to intrude France as a global force in distant areas such as Quebec or Indochina, For Pompidou it is not a question of renouncing France's world role but of limiting it. This was recently emphasized by Paris's deliberate avoidance of publicly irritating either the Indians or the Pakistanis.

Position Remains

Pompidou feels that France in no way renounces its moral position everywhere but simply acknowledges it hasn't the strength to insist on what is right or wrong in certain areas. It doesn't have the means to act everywhere and therefore prefers to concentrate its political strength and influence on Eu-

The editorial page of Dec. 11-13 had three articles. The first, by James Reston, spoke of the fact that the United States is so powerful and big that unknowingly it plays a large part in the life of other countries. The second, by Anthony Lewis, was a moral condemnation of the United States in the Indian subcontinent conflict. The third, by Peter Grose, was an Israeli analysis of the same conflict with the conclusion that the ambivalence shown by the U.S. would be regretted if war broke out in their region. These commentaries reflect the American dilemma of always being trapped between our moral and pragmatic ideas, our self-struction. There is now perceptibly less psychological tension between Paris and Jerusalem. The Unique Society British Life Still Puts Decency First

By Alfred Friendly

LONDON (WP)-When better men than I have broken their picks at trying to discover, describe and explain the unique character of British society, another attempt must be foolhardy. But it is close to inescapable for a reporter at the end of a five-year assignment here.

Discovery and description are the easier parts: Britain is sturdy, stable, free from turbulence, good-tempered, generally tolerant and well disposed and highly agreeable.

Most of the British judgments about what is morally right and wrong, about what is admirable in a man and in his dealings with his fellows, about what is good government and what is bad, about personal and collective decency, about what constitutes fairness and good deeds and good works-most of these are identical with those of Americans. This, I suggest, is the root of the "natural relationship" between the two countries (to use Edward Heath's phrase, much more accurate than the now outmoded "special relationship").

But there is so much that differs on the two sides of the Atlantic: Not in the basic judgments, but in the individual actions and attitudes that grow out of them.

Put simply—over simply—the British are not aggressive, as individuals or as a society. They belong, to be sure, to Adiai Steven-son's generation of rising expectations, but their expectations are not so great as those of their American cousins.

In national terms, expansion of power has truly been forsworn; in individual terms the British want less of material things. Perhaps the houses and rooms of the lower and middle-income families are so small that accumulation is a burden rather than a goal.

Change has come slower in Britain, so expectation of change is less. "That unexpectancy," Prof. Richard Hoggart has just been telling us in BBC's current Reith Lectures, "can also be a strength... It can give doggedness, a slowness in being over-borne in trouble, and a refusal to strike histrionics. You expect little, and you expect to soldier on."

Yes, much less fire in the belly. The result is agreeable quietude. It also may be stagnation, which could lead to economic lassitude and then to the opposite of stagnation: seething social unrest. But history cannot be read in advance, Dismissing, then, what is unknowable for the future, consider the manifestations of the present: The Britishman is Gelbraithian, willing to see a smaller proportion of the national output going to himself, in the form of goods, and a larger share to community amenities-flowering parks, public transport, municipal services, clean streets, general rather than individually secured protection against the economic and health hazards of life. He is an individualist, to be sure, but not the "rugged" one of the American stereotype.

As to his personal relationships, manners may be as good an indication as any: The formal courtesy that appears in America to be limited exclusively to the business of letting the other fellow go first through the doorway is here more widely and generously applied. One does not jockey for priority, but goes without resentment or even second thooghts to the end of the line.

The motorist gives the car going into the main road from a side road a chance to do so; there is almost a Gaston-Alphonse business at the intersections—and never a plunging into one so that transverse traffic is blocked.

Sense of Justice

The attitude implicit bere, that the neighbor or stranger bas rights and feelings the same as yours, pervades tavern and shop, public office and football stadium. It is, I think, a homely and con-crete manifestation of the sense of justice and fair play and humanity that is marked in this country as nowhere else I know.

The noncompetitiveness, the nonjockeying for position and the lessened expectation are mutually linked, each being a different flowering from a common root. I do not suggest that these charac-teristics are undiluted virtues; indeed, for the nation qua nation

The lessened expectation that diminishes competitiveness is also in part linked to the persistence of class distinctions. Most sons of British butchers, I believe, think of becoming-expect to become-British butchers, Bat good or bad, that cantiousness of aspiration makes for the quiet, ordered (as distinct from regimented) society that I listed at the outset as a British characteristic. For the most part, dogs do not eat dogs in Britain.

We now come to the hard part, the explaining of why the characteristics noted above exist. My explanation (which merely begs for another one, which I cannot supply) is that the nation's history was such that many centuries ago-the roots may indeed lie back a thousand years-the society coalesced in a common view on what should be the goals of its government, who should participate in the governing and whom the government should serve.

That set of commonly shared resolves came earlier here than anywhere else, and has endured. The revolutionaries, such as they were—the Luddites and Chartists, the peasants of 1381, Cromwell's soldiers, the rioters of the last century, even the general strikers of 1926—were not out to overthrow the society. In that sense, Britain never had a revolution.

Nor is there a drive for one now. Leaving aside a raggle-taggle of Moscow, Mao and Trotskyite Communists and a fringe of New Left students, even the radicals press only for reforms-deep ones. to be sure-but not revolts.

Through its history and especially in the last 150 years, the British government and establishment were responsive to public opinion and ready to alleviate injustice.

There was equivalent accommodation and restraint on the part of the agitators themselves, always acting in an unstated agreement never to go too far.

The price Britain pays for its socially peaceful, nonaggressive, considerate, unabrasive way of life may well be too high-certainly too high for Americans to accept. It consists of a relatively low rate in social nobility. There is placidity and personal geniality here just because it rarely occurs to the British butcher's son that he is entitled-or, as in America, actually enjoined by the national mores and folklore-to claw his way up the ladder. At jeast as far as can be heard in the speeches of its firebrands not even the left wing of the British Socialist party suggests that the society and its economics should be so ordered that the butcher's son be given a chance to make a fortune in the meat-packing business, but only that oil butchers have their economic situation, as butchers, improved.

One indication, and the most important one. of the persistence of class distinction is the ratio of educational haves to have-nots. The 1969-70 statistics show that only about 7 percent to 10 percent of youths 18 to 20 years old are enrolled as full-time students in higher educational institutions (i.e., beyond secondary schools). Of those aged 21 to 34, there are not quite 4 percent. This is one of the lowest ratios in Europe and may be contrasted with the fact that one out of every six Americans in 1970 had four years of college education or the equivalent.

Origins Matter

Another manifestation is the insistent awareness of one's origins. Interview some creative personality, an author, playwright or artist, and be will at once start talking ebout his origins, and usually defensively-insisting he has not betrayed his working-class background, or, if he was upper class to begin with, that he really bleeds for the poor and humble.

It would never occur to the American counterpart to examine himself in those terms. Come to think of it, Americans simply do not use the phrase "the working class" and are uncomfortable do not think of ourselves as moving from, or living in, one class or another. A sense of class is not in our bowels. It is, here.

Someday, perhaps not as swiftly as once was thought, class distinctions will diminish here and even disappear, particularly as plans materialize for hugely expanded university enrollment. Then, presumably, what is left of the "forelock-touching" attitude in the society will vanish. If that comes about, the nagging question arises whether Britain will thereby lose the benign quality of its life and become as abrasive and competitive in personal relations as it with an on in Evene at in personal relations as it is with us or in France or in any of the Communist paradises.

Again, no predictions are in order. But I am not overmuch worried. My guess is that the heartening egalitarianism of Britain, as shown in its welfare system and concern for social justice, will come to be matched by an egalitarianism in economic and social opportunity.

Britain is a nation where a balance between order and freedom was reached by natural growth, where a common purpose was forged by history and is not at issue, where the citizens feel secure in their dealings with each other.

It is a society in which the members, more often than not, are fond of each other.

Eurobonds Speculators' Greed Is All That's Stopping Expected Decline in Rates

By Nicholas Jones

LONDON, Dec. 26 (AP-DJ) .--Eurodollar rates will be down to 5.25 to 5.5 percent on most fixed positions by the middle of January or earlier, London dealers believe

"There will be a vastly different Eurodollar market within the next six weeks," one dealer said. "The only thing stopping the decline at the moment is greed on the part of speculators."

Following the realignment of currencies at the Group of Ten meeting in Washington, many dealers predicted a substantial fall io Eurodollar rates from the 6.5-7.5 percent levels then ruling. Last Monday this failed to materialize, and Tuesday the rates actually showed a firmer tendency in late trading after dropping about half a percentage point earlier.

The dealers said it seemed that the speculators who had taken "massive" amounts of dollars out of the Euromarket during the crisis were even now not yet satisfied that they had run their positions far enough. "These in-vestors, as they are politely called, are so greedy after the paper profits of recent weeks that they are hanging on hoping for more," one dealer complained.

Currency dealers said this worried them because the speculators were showing that they had little if any understanding of how the market works. The dealers agreed that by holding onto their posi-tions the speculators would indeed probably push the dollar lower than it should be, but the lower it went the harder the rally would he when speculative liquidation at last occurred.

"The longer this goes on, the more people will be hurt when currency selling finally starts," one dealer said. "As soon as the first signs of real selling pressure are seen, everybody will be looking for their dollar profits. Maybe the first 5 percent in the market will get better rates than they would get right now, but the other 95 percent will be hurt bedly. It will all even out in the end. The only people to suffer from this sort of situation will be the genuine customers and us, the dealers.

The dealers said one particular factor militating against liquidation of speculative funds at present is the fact that from the weekend the British authorities re-moved the recently imposed exchange controls that disallowed interest on foreign sterling bal-ALICES.

"This must have played some part in persuading speculators to hold off taking their dollar profits immediately," a dealer said.

Some Eurodollar banks weren't so surprised, however. They said that in their experience many positions had been taken up that would run for months yet, or a fortnight at least. Thus they didn't expect any action until the new year. They agreed with the currency dealers that when business did finally pick up, the movement in rates would be extreme. "It's difficult to predict but I think 5 percent would be a fair estimate." Other dealers went as low as 4, 4.25 or 4.5 percent for short dates. year-The dealers pointed out there

Currency Accord Gives the Stock Market Good Reason to Celebrate Christmas Early

By Thomas E. Mullaney NEW YORK, Dec. 26 (NYT). -The nations of the Western world received an early Christmas gift last week when reprecentatives of the leading industrial countries wrapped up B new currency realignment package with remarkable speed and then proceeded to consider more deliberately the other elements of the program-trade adjustments and the sharing of defense burdens-that must be solved to restore international economic stability. Wall Street and other securitles markets immediately cele-brated the historic currency agreement, and the dollar gained strength in the foreign-exchange markets in orderly activity. Economists and businessmen everywhere were pleased because the new currency parities were accompanied by removal of the 10 percent import surcharge that had aroused so much rancor abroad when it was imposed by the United States last Ang. 15. Perhaps it was the realization that there will be tough sledding in the trade talks that sobered some of the stock market's enthusiasm last week after its initial strong upward burst last Monday following the successful monetary meeting of the Group of Ten. Or it might merely have been a normal bout of mild profit-taking after the stock market's 88-point jump in the Dow Jones average (11 percent) since Thanksgiving.

Wall Street Confident

The market's amazing climb in that short period, one of the most pronounced in Wall Street history, was triggered by confidence that the monetary talks would reach agreement and remove much of the uncertainty that had been plaguing the securities markets.

NEW YORK, Dec. 26 (NYT).—Advances outnimbered declines by a small margin last week on the American Stock Exchange and on the Over-the-Counter market.

Turnover in both markets was brisk despite the shortened trading week. The exchange and the counter market were closed on Friday because of the Christmas holidays.

Both markets made their biggest gains on Monday when investors responded to the weekend's news about the realignment of world currencies, including the devaluation of the dollar in terms of gold

One broker said that as a result of the devaluation there was a strong possibility that $2 billion to $3 billion in foreign money might more into American stocks in the next few months.

Another factor that helped prop the market last week was the announcement that durable goods orders increased in November by $1.12 billion, or 3.5 percent from October. Brokers blamed profit-taking for limiting the size of last week's advance. However, they viewed this as a normal occurrence after-the market's long upswing. They said that some of the selling also resulted from year-end tax selling and by the approach of the long holiday week-end.

The exchange's price index finished on Thirsday at 25.29, up 0.09 for the week. Turnover amounted to 21.89 million shares compared with 22.05 million the week before, which had five trading days. A total of 63 blocks of 10,000 shares or more were traded last week compared with 58 blocks the week before. The greatest used uow is to move promptly toward the re-moval of tariff and nontariff barriers to trade, and to move away from the spirit of protectionism that exists in so many countries. With industry running below capacity in most of the Western industrial world, the competitive environment remains intense.

Resistance to the U.S. demands for trade accommodations can be expected to be quite stiff. Presi-dent Georges Pompidou of France served notice to that effect when he said last Wednesday that his country would make no trade concessions that weakened or eliminated the European Eco-nomic Community in agriculture.

Eurobonds

The dealers finally noted that one fact puzzling them was that the strong currencies allowed to float freely to what were gen-erally considered as overvalued levels during the crisis, notably the deutsche mark, the Swiss franc and the guilder, weren't by any means as weak as they ex-pected. "Quite honestly I find this

The dollar won a bigger depre-ciation than anyooe thought pos-sible in Europe several months ago, and by all accounts is the world's strongest currency today. Some money was already flow-ing back into dollars last week. but because of certain technical considerations (for instance, the year-end window dressing practices of the European banks) there was no huge reverse tide. The move into dollars should be intensified, the experts say, by what is expected to the by what is expected to be a further decline in European in-terest rates over the next few months or so and a rise in tha United States accompanying what is expected to be a vigorous American business recovery.

The normal contract for North-South here is four hearts, but partnership was highly this aggressive, as shown. South re-sponded one heart to his partner's one-diamond opening and jump-ed to three slubs on the next position:

Naturally North had visions of slam when his pariner eventual-ly rebid hearts, so he made an invitational jump to five hearts. South should perhaps have pass-ed at this point, disgnosing a chub yoid with North and therefore excessive duplication of values in that suit, but he continued to six hearts. The slam is an unsound one, but can be made as the cards lie if the declarer guesses how to do it. South found the winning route. He won the spade lead in dum-my with the ace, discarded his spade jack on the diamond ace and raffed a diamond. He had decided, rightly as it turned out, to take a ruffing finesse against West in clubs rather than a ruffing finesse against East in GTT MAY BE," said W.H. Auden, "that in a not remote future, it will be impossible to distinguish human beings living on one area of the earth's surface from those living on another." Paul Bowles, one of America's most original travel writers, includes this remark in the introduction to his own fine collection of pieces, "Their Heads Are Green and Their Heads Are Blue." Mr. Bowles also quotes Claude Lévi-Strauss: "What travel discloses to us first of all is our own garbage, flung in the face of humanity." Like Alan Moorehead

By Alan Truscott and a number of other modern travelers, Prof. Lévi-Strauss may have been depressed by the sight of so many African men in the jack was continued, and this time West covered with the king. This was ruffed in dummy, and Boy Scout uniform of khald shorts the closed hand was re-entered and shirt and the women in with a spade ruff to reach this shapeless "house dresses"-a gar-ment which is, by definition, too unattractive to go out in.

These pessimistic thoughts are provoked by three beautifully illustrated books about Africa. One looks at the almost inhuman grace of the Massi, the Turkana, the Girlana, the Samburu-to name just a few-and wonders how non-Africans can presume to "help" them. It is impossible not to feel that such grace must be related to the way these people live and the things they believe in. Or if you study the sculpture of tribes like the Dogon and South did not know that the Benin, it's difficult to imagine what Western civilization could clubs would break, so he ruffed the club eight with the heart offer them-except medical science-without adulterating their with the heart king, and the defenders could make nothing but cultures. Or simply look at the landscapes of Africa, particularly those photographed by Eliot Elisoton, and ask yourself whether there is anything in the world worth sacrificing them for. It is natural for Africans to desire "progress," to want to ex-change their diseases—scrofula, malaria and leprosy-for ours, which Raymond Queneau defined as "ontalgia"-a neuralgia of being. But it is just as natural for some of us to regret it, to see Africa as the last land of surprises, as not only the original birthplace of man but as the one place where he still seems young. where his body is more like a gift or a talent than a burden, where so many of his impolses seem to be aesthetic, rather than economically motivated or securityoriented.

Of the three books, "The Horizon History of Africa" is the most SAYS DY J remarkably good introduction to the subject, and "Civilizations of the Nile" by Margaret Shinnie and "Kingdom: of West Africa" by Dr. A. Adu Boshen of the University of Ghana are outstanding too. With "The Coming of the Europeans" and the chapters that follow it, we enter a less happy period but one that may be, for that very reason, equally important. The text of "Africa: Images and Realities" does not have the impressive depth of the Horizon book. Written by two journalists in a style that may be described -witbout condescension, one hopes—as journalistic, it is a reasonably good survey of the main lines of African history and culture. The "images" of the title refer to "unspoiled" Africa; tha "realities"-fortunately a much smaller number-deal with the more recent changes.

Mirella Ricciardi grew up in Kenya and wisely photographs its people as if they were themselves the most indigenous forms of art. In one shot, she catches the dust raised by a herd of cattle as it is suffused by sunlight, and the result is like a relief hammered in gold. Her photographs are more than beautiful: Each one manages to be an epiphany as well, in which we see not only the faces and bodies of the sub-jects, but their personalities, their passions and the patterns of their lives too: The text is hardly more than a series of long captions for the pictures-and it is eractly right. It tells us just enough to frame them in a time, a place and a society. In the last century or so, Africa.

has been the victim of a series of experiments imposed on her by outsiders. In some of these experiments, the subjects were treated like animals in a particularly brutal laboratory; in others they were killed with kindness, the sort of kindness Bertrand Russell had in mind when he described a tribe that had quite literally died of boredom because well-meaning missionaries had taken away everything that gave their lives significance. Now the experiment is in African hands and there are those who consider it bad taste to criticize the results, because we all have an inalienable right to our mistakes. One only hopes that Africans will learn to appreciate the beanty of their respective cultures-a Klick, on the next play, gained 3, Csonka hit for 4 and Kilch was stopped by Jim Lynch and Aaron Brown for no gain on third down at the 30.

That's when the 5-foot-7 Yepremian trotted on to the field, Karl Noonan came in as his holder and the Kansas City fans tensed. Mike Kolen snapped the ball, Noonan placed it down at the 37 and Yepremian kicked.

Blin Was Game Biin was game. That's all. In the early rounds, he landed sev-eral hooks to the former champlon, who wasn't moving. The West German connected nicely with the left in the second, but he had put 12 rounds of fighting into two and it then became a matter of time and how good Ali could look with the charging punching bag. He looked as good. as he could.

Yct after the fight, All, hardly sweating, said: "I only had ten days of troining, but the other guy was in great shape. He was determined. But I wasn't as sharp as I wanted to be. I thought I would knock him out in two rounds."

All was aware of what he had to do tonight. After losing a heavyweight titla bout to Joe Frazier in March, Ali took a rest and then hit the comeback road, Not as Swift

The Wonder of Me

By Russell Baker

WASHINGTON-It was a day like many days in December, encouraging direct head-on viewa of life's realities. The car, after . all, was broken. Broken most seriously. And the cat, the gray cat. Face

it. That constant clawing she had been doing at the hindquarters for several weeks now probably meant there was a serious cat malady in the house. Possibly the mange. (Whatever that is.) Cat most certainly impended.

And then, the shutters at the front of the house. The paiot there peeling badly. That would mean a big dip into capital come spring. What capital? If there capital, the dentist would were have been paid months ago, and that water leaking through the dining room ceiling-almost certainly from the shower stall overhead-that water could be stopped from leaking down onto the sideboard.

The children-ah, children indeed! Great, healthy, sharpwitted men and women rather-which is fine, really; really fine; kids, after all, finally grow up and turn into people-but the way they have oow of looking at their parents. Well, that is another of life's realitles.

Well, days in December encourage this sort of life outlook, and this narticular day, which was last Wednesday, was such a day until relief came from, of all places, the White House. On that day two of President Nixon's officially certified statement issuers-Clark MacGregor and Herbert G. Klein-issued an official statement summing up the President's third year in office.

This third year of his presidency, it said, had produced "large conceptions," "daring 'innovations," "substantial progress," "sweeping" and "historic" pro-grams, "bold initiatives," "solid leadership," "very substantial good news" for farmers and a decline in the number of traffic deaths.

What tonic for spirits too ready to forget the positive aspects of life! What an example from statement issuers Klein and Mac-Gregor! A statement-that was what was needed. A statement to the entire family-grandmother, gray cat, big people-children and Into the parlor, everyonel President, as so often this The year, has again lit the way.

"In the 22d year of my administration, my fellow family, I have decided to look upon my accomplishments and pronounce them splendid. Bold initiatives, solid leadership, sweeping proposals, historic programs, large conceptions, daring innovation and substantial progress are phrases too seldom heard from the critics in this house-those prophets of doom and gloom who profess to represent our great shutters and automobile, to speak for our sileot but loyal gray cat, to state the case for that wonderful segment of our population, household youth.

"Immodesty forbids me to dwell upon the flaws of my policy, and wby should it not? What policy is without flaws? Show mc a policy without flaws and I will show you a man who owns the insurance company. Show me a policy without flaws and I will show you a dining room ceiling

"Solid leadership has left the paint on 90 percent of the outside surface of this house intact for the year. My large conceptions in selecting this household site have placed us all within easy walking distance of the bus line, thus ending our dependence upon the automobile and accustoming us all to health-giving dally exercise.

"Thus have I made the liver bile of the family flow at the rate of four pints per day, creating substantial progress in the growth of our children. Children indeed! People, rather! And why have they become people? Because of sweeping and historic programs undertaken 21, and 19, and 17 years ago which, had they been delayed much longer, would have meant that you good people would still be children today.

"I have very substantial good oews for cats. Due to my policy of not subjecting cats to treatment and cure of mange, I have enabled them to spend the largest part of their time scratching their hindquarters.

"Thus have I diminished their temptation to run gaily across the street, and thus have I caused cat traffic death to cease.

"With daring innovation, I have taken up the study and testing of fine whiskies and wines, Here indeed is substantial progress over the mindless pastime of tossing children way up over my head. And finally, with my genius for bold initiative. I have devised a new way for getting water into the Lyonnaise potatoes when we serve a buffet dinner on the sideboard. I declare myself extremely pleased with me, and I thank mc. Goodnight."

The Mississippi: Polluted Highway

By Roy Reed

NEW ORLEANS (NYT) .-- A government study to be published soon will report that waste dumped into the Mississippi River may be threatening aquatic life in the Gulf of Mexico and human health in southern Louisiana.

The report will be the latest and most urgent in a long series of warnings that Americans are destroying their greatest river.'

Its floods once devastated entire regions. States have disputed each other for its islands and sandbars. People have lived out their lives on it, some in shanty boats and others in floating palaces. Many have died in it and because of it.

But now the Mississippi has lost much of its awe. Chanceled and leveed, the river is now regarded by many as a highway for barges and a ditch for carrying off waste and poison. The Mississippi is so dirty now that swimming and fishing in it are almost out nf the question. It has been customary to think that the Mississippi River system, which drains 41 percent of the continental United States, is too large to be destroyed by pollution. On an average day, the river carries more than 500,000 cubic feet of water a second under the Greater New Orleans Bridge.

This giant discharge is the greatest source of nntrients for life in the Gulf of Mexico. But Mississippl has also become the gulf's greatest source of man-made poison. "The view that the mighty Mississippl flows on unchanged just isn't so," officials of the Federal Water Pollution Control Administration said in 1968. "Old Man River is troubled and is showing signs of more trouble ahead."

The problem has grown worse since then Citles in the river basin are slowly gaining in treating sewage, but industrial dumping and the runoff of agricultural pesticides and fertilizers are still major sources of contamination.

Industrial pollution has increased as more water-using plaots have been set up along the banks of the Mississlppi and its tributaries.

Some industries, such as the Humble Oil Co. at Baton Rouge. La., are spending large amounts of money to curtail pollution. But others are moving forward slowly, and only after insistent prodding by government agencies and environmentalists. Federal and state authoritles know surprisingly little about the specific dangers to mao and other forms of life from the hundreds of man-made substances that are dumped into the river. But some officials are aware of the general dangers and of certain isolated threats to the public or the ecological chain. They know, for example, that a study in 1959 found that residents of New Orleans had three times as great an incidence of bladder cancer as those of Atlaota or Birmingham, Ala. No one knew why, but the Louisians Wild Life and Fisheries Com Chemical waste flows into Mississippi near Baton Rouge, La.

New Orleans drinking water, which comes from the Mississippi, was suspected.

But day by day and year by year, no government agency at any level tries to keep track of the wastes dumped into the Mississippi system and their impact on people, wildlife and plants.

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE, MONDAY, DECEMBER 27, 1971

A spokesman for the Food and Drug Administration said here recently that the agency had done little testing of fish in this area in the last several months.

But he predicted that the agency would soon begin testing for other heavy metals besides mercury. It made a number of mercury tests last year and found varying levels of contamination.

Ovsters are the only seafood tested continuously in the New Orleans area. "You cao find everything in them, depending on where you get them," the spokesman said

The absence of general and continuous testing to determine the possible hazards in food and water increases the significance of a study now being prepared for publication by the Baton Rouge staff of the Environmental Protection Agency.

The study raises more questions than It answers. For example, the agency has found 46 organic chemicals in the drinking water of New Orleans and Carville, a small community up the river, after the water had been treated and presumably purified.

Two of those chemicals are thought to cause cancer. Four others have caused changes in the tissues of experimental animals. What the 40 other chemicals might do is largely unknown.

"The bealth and well-being of 1.5 millico people who drink water from water plants using the Mississippi River as the source of raw water may be endangered by the discharge of industrial wastes containing materials known to have toxic. zarcinogenic, teratogenic or mutagenic properties," the study concludes.

The study focuses on the southern section of the Mississippi. Sixty industries that manufacture mainly chemicals, paper and petroleum products dump their effluent into the river between Saint Francisville, La., just above Baton Ronge, and Venice, La., the last town of any size before the river reaches the Gulf.

New industrial sites are constantly being bought along both banks of the river. carved from land long used for sugar cane

The Environmental Protection Agency has found that the industrial plants already established are contaminating the river with cyanides, phenols, arsenic, lead, cadmium, copper, chromium, mercury and zinc.

The study says that 37 manufacturing plants dump at least five pounds a day of at least me heavy metal, such as lead or mercury. These concentrations "may enhuman life and the life of the aquatic biota," the report says. Lead, which is highly toxic in large amounts, causes the greatest concern. The agency has found that 27 industrial plants dump from 5 to 3,700 pounds of lead a day into this section of the river.

Industries have drastically reduced the dumping of mercury in recent months, but some still goes on. The Kaiser Aluminum and Chemical Corporation was granted permission recently by the Louisiana Stream Control Commission to continue dumping spent bauxite, containing small amounts of mercury, for at least three more years.

Some industries have only recently acknowledged that they had a problem. Kaiser, for example, insisted until a year ago that its spent bauxite did not harm' the river.

James J. Friloux, acting chief of the Baton Rooge office of the Environmental Protection Agency, believes that industrial pollution will be substantially solved in two or three years. He said most industries oo the river planned to have secondary waste treatment plants either finished under way by the end of 1972 ... or

After that, he said, agricultural chemicals will remain the greatest problem and perhaps the toughest to solve..

The thousands of municipalities in the Mississippi Basin have spent hundreds of millions of nollars to treat the sewage they dump directly or indirectly into the river.

The Mississippi may never again be as clean as it was when Mark Twain knew if. But, with enough money spent to correct past mistakes, neither is it likely to become a sewer. · · · ·
